Illness & Injury Prevention & Intervention

The work of certified school nurses benefits the entire school community by:

- ✓ Reducing the occurrence and spread of preventable disease by tracking and enforcing immunization requirements.
- ✓ Caring for students with disabilities or complex medical needs who require feeding tubes, breathing treatments, blood glucose monitoring, insulin injections, seizure management, and many other daily interventions.
- ✓ Serving as health advocates and care coordinators to connect students and their families with school and community-based resources to get the services they need.
- ✓ Identifying medical issues in students who require further evaluation.
- ✓ Providing crucial first aid and potentially lifesaving care to the entire school community in emergencies.
- ✓ Sometimes serving as the only health care professional to which students have access.
- ✓ Often being the first professionals to identify and treat the psychosomatic symptoms of a child struggling with mental health issues.
- ✓ Developing and implementing Section 504 plans, the health portion of Special Education Individual Education Programs (IEPs) and Individualized Health care plans.

The health needs of our student population have changed dramatically since 1949, and yet the law has remained static.

Certified School Nurses are responsible for understanding the complex health needs and managing the care of up to 1,500 students in their respective school districts.

School-based nursing care looked much different in 1949 when this ratio was established.

At a ratio of 1 certified school nurse to 1,500 students, certified school nurses must:

Divide their time among multiple school buildings covering many miles, including private and parochial schools.

Balance mandated screenings and chronic care with first aid and illnesses for 1,500 potential patients.

Work very hard to forge the relationships of trust that allow them to identify emerging problems and truly support students' needs.

Worry that an emergency will occur when they're at a different building.

Certified school nurses are PASSIONATE, CARING PROFESSIONALS who strive to provide the best possible care to students. It's our STUDENTS who suffer most when the health services they rely upon are stretched too thin.
